

Louisville, Ky.'s Gigabit Experience Center Brings Fiber Connection Speeds to 'Network Connectivity Desert'

Zack Quaintance | May 26, 2017

Louisville, Ky., has launched a new public workspace — one that combines free loaner laptops and fiber Internet connection with modern design aesthetics, the sort more closely associated with trendy coffee shops than government facilities. And it's done so in an economically challenged neighborhood where people often lack access to tech.

“A lot of times when government gets involved, it's very utilitarian,” Simrall said. “It was very important for us to design this space so it was beautiful and welcoming.”

<http://www.govtech.com/civic/Louisville-Ky-Gigabit-Experience-Center.html>