

How does a new medication use tech to keep track of when you take it?

News Staff | November 15, 2017

The Food and Drug Administration (FDA) Monday approved the U.S.' first digitally tracked medication, according to an FDA news release.

The Food and Drug Administration (FDA) Monday approved the U.S.' first digitally tracked medication, according to an FDA news release.

If successful, this tech has the potential for many applications in improving the administration of medicines. It could help ensure that people who might have trouble remembering to take their pills, such as elderly patients, don't underdose or overdose. It might also be used to keep track of opioid medications to prevent addictions.

<http://www.govtech.com/question-of-the-day/Question-of-the-Day-for-11152017.html>